Mirrored Images

Popular from the 1920s to the 1940s, mirrored accent pieces are poised, once again, to add elegance and interest to today's homes.

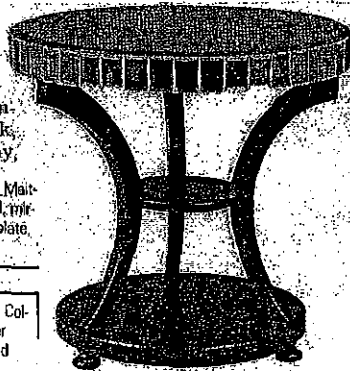

At this year's spring High Point Market, the glitzy side of Hollywood glamour re-emerged quietly, yet noticeably, as a handful of manufacturers unveiled mirrored accent pieces—consols, bars, tables and armoires.

Dating back to the days of Louis XIV, mirrored furniture popular in Hollywood in the '30s, thanks, in part, to Syrie Maughan, wife of novelist Somerset Maughan, and an interior decorator who used mirrored screens in many of the high-end rooms she designed.

Key characteristics of today's collections—such as those by Julian Chloster and David Hudson Wright—include Art Deco-inspired shapes and lines, dark, high-gloss finishes, and shiny, silver hardware and accents.

Consumers looking to add pizzazz to an Art Deco or contemporary style room can choose from a host of mirrored accent pieces paired with wood or metal. An accent table with a mirrored top complements the silver hardware typically found on contemporary and Art Deco inspired furniture. A mirrored console reflects the light of an accent lamp, adding sparkle to a room. And like a large wall mirror, a mirrored armoire can make any space look larger.
